EXHIBITION OF BRITISH ENGRAVING AND ETCHING.

INTRODUCTION.

THE present Exhibition of Engraving and Etching, the third of a series of the Graphic Arts, owes its initiation, like those of "Lithography" and of "Modern Illustration," held on former occasions, to the Council of the Society of Arts; and the majority of those who have assisted the Board of Education in the organization of the Exhibition were invited to act on the Committee of Advice on the recommendation of that Society. The original proposal was to exhibit all methods of intaglio engraving, including photogravure and other mechanical processes, but on the suggestion of the Advisory Committee the exhibition has been restricted to Fine Art Engraving and Etching, and the exhibition of photographic processes of engraving has been reserved for a future occasion. It was also decided to confine the present exhibition to work by British engravers and etchers, and by foreign artists who practised, or still practise, their art in this country.

The Art of Engraving on Metal Plates does not appear to have taken root in England until nearly a century after it had become firmly established on the Continent: and then to have owed its introduction to foreign artists. Some explanation of this curious tardiness on the part of English printers to avail themselves of a new and convenient method of picture-making, may doubtless be found in the fact that, abroad, it had been very largely devoted to the production of such representations of saints and other religious subjects as would hardly be acceptable at that period in this country. Even when adopted it was for a long time used only for secular portraits, title-pages, and the reproduction of maps, and anatomical and architectural drawings.

The earliest mention of line engraving in England is to be found in a list of goods attached to a deposition dated 20th August, 32 Henry VIII. (A.D. 1540), relating to the printer Thomas Reynolds. Among other entries the following concern our subject:—

"It. ij ffygures graven in copper the one the man the other woman with their Inrayles thereto belonging."

"Item. certeyn greate capytall letters graven in copper."

"Item. The ffygures of pater-noster graven in copper, conteyning ix peces."

The plates referred to in the first of the entries are believed to be identical with some of the illustrations to the first edition of The Birth of Mankind (1540, British Museum), which is, so far as present research goes, the first example of a British use of the art.

These anatomical plates have by some been attributed to Thomas Gemini*, a foreigner, whose place of origin (he styles himself Lysiensis) has not yet been satisfactorily identified. In 1545, however, Gemini published his Compendiosa totius Anatomie delineatio, an abridgment of a book by Vesalius, issued at Basle in 1543. This has a fine title-page, engraved in pure line with hardly any shading, and consisting of the Royal Arms surrounded by a wealth of architectural ornament and symbolical figures, delicately and correctly drawn. Of this design it may be said that the chief part is perhaps to be referred to the Southern French School of the time; though there is nothing in the heraldry to lead one to reject it as British. But Gemini would doubtless have the material for this detail supplied to him by an Englishman. The anatomical diagrams contained in the volume are well drawn and engraved, but are copied from the wood-cuts in the Basle edition. The third edition of Gemini's work was printed by himself at his press in Blackfriars, 1559.

Humfray Cole and Augustine Ryther are the first native-born engravers known at present; but their work was chiefly the making of maps. In 1587 and 1588 Theodor de Bry of Frankfort was in England; and his influence may have helped in the formation of a definite school of engraving which now makes its appearance.

William Rogers (worked 1589 to 1604) is perhaps the earliest, and certainly the greatest artist, of the group. Nothing biographical is known of him, but many of his prints are now recognised. Of these the magnificent full-length portrait of Queen Elizabeth deserves special reference. Besides engraving other portraits Rogers also illustrated many books, among which Segar's Honor Military and Civill, and the title-page and portrait of John Gerard in the 1597 edition of The Herball, may be noted. Contemporary with Rogers was Thomas Cockson or Coxon (worked 1591-1636), who made portraits in a style similar but inferior to that of Rogers, but whose "Revells of Christendome" is certainly one of the earliest engraved caricatures by an Englishman. Renold Elstracke is a third artist of the time, a Fleming settled in England (1598-1625) who should be associated with the two last-named. Their work has some characteristics which differentiate it from that of the succeeding generation of engravers. With them the line has a certain amount of value as such, as opposed to a later tendency to its chief use as material for expressing mass; the plate is not overworked, and an interesting use of dot is found, which if pursued, should have brought about the stipple method a century earlier. But especially remarkable is the fine decorative feeling shown in these prints, and the excellent treatment of ornament and heraldry which they display.

The settlement in England in 1616 of Simon van de Passe, a Netherlandish engraver of Utrecht, and in 1621, of his brother Willem, is next to be noted. Crispin van de Passe, their father, had executed plates before for this country, and the effects of his style were already to be seen in English engraving of the time; but he does not seem ever to have lived here. His sons, however, executed a very large number of plates, and laid down the lines on which the art developed for a considerable period. Their chief associates or pupils were William Hole, Francis Delaram, John Payne, Thomas Cecill, William Marshall, George Glover, and Robert Vaughan. The work of this school is in technique and drawing an advance on that of the late Elizabethan artists; but these gains hardly compensate for the loss of the decorative quality of the latter.

But the art was now well established, and the remaining history of line engraving is only that of its successive practitioners. In the latter half of the seventeenth century, the chief of these was William Faithorne, a pupil of John Payne, who during part of the Civil War, had studied at Paris under the great French master Robert Nanteuil. His portraits, executed after his return, are of the first quality, and have hardly been surpassed in England by those of any other period. David Loggan (a native of Dantzic, c. 1635–1700), Robert White (1645–1704), and William Sherwin (worked 1670–1711), also belong to this time.

During the eighteenth century, line engraving obtained an application somewhat wider than before. Its best work was no longer given almost exclusively to portraiture, for we now have the fine landscapes of Francis Vivares (1709–1780), a Frenchman who settled in London at the age of 18; of that great engraver, William Woollett (1735–1785), of James Peak (c. 1730–1782), and of John Browne (1741–1801). There are also the satires of William Hogarth (1697–1764)—perhaps the best known prints of the whole British School—and the engravings after the Old Masters of Sir Robert Strange (1721–1792), a native of Orkney and pupil of Le Bas. But, on the whole, this branch of the art did not flourish, so overshadowed was it by those of mezzotint and stipple.

The commencement of the nineteenth century saw another new development in the use of steel plates, and also the application, on a large scale, of line engraving to the purposes of book illustration. An increase in the popular taste for reproductions of pictures also made itself felt in the same direction; and the engravers of paintings by Wilkie, Mulready, Webster and Landseer, form a school by themselves: the productions of which are not however comparable with the fine work after the drawings of J. M. W. Turner. Turner had a genius for inspiring his engravers to their highest level; and in the view of many critics the plates made for such works as “Picturesque Views of the South Coast of England,” and “Views . . . in Richmondshire” are amongst the best of British Line Engravings. Of the many engravers who worked for Turner, mention may be made of G., and W. B. Cooke, E. Goodall, R. Wallis, E. Finden, W. Miller, and J. C. Allen. Of other engravers of the century, P. W. Tomkins, J. Burnet, J. Pye, J. H. Robinson, J. Watt, T. Landseer, B. P. Gibbon, S. Cousins, Lumb Stocks, G. T. Doo, G. H. Robinson, and Francis Holl, are only a few of many notable names.

Mezzotint engraving was invented by Ludwig von Siegen, an officer who had been in the service of William VI., Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, but had resigned about 1638 and settled at Amsterdam, where his first plate in the method—a portrait of the Landgrave’s mother—was complete in August, 1642. Von Siegen communicated his secret to Prince Rupert, at Brussels, in 1654, and he brought the art to England, where he explained it to, among others, John Evelyn, whose “Sculptura” (1662) contains the first English account of the process. Prince Rupert employed Wallerant Vaillant both before and after his return to England, to assist him in the preparation of his plates; and many of the best works of the latter artist were done in this country. As to the Prince’s own productions, the finest is undoubtedly “The Great Executioner,” after Spagnoletto (1658); and it holds its own in artistic merit, if not in technique, with the best work that followed it.

Prince Rupert was followed by William Sherwin (fl. 1669-1714), Francis Place (1647-1728), Henri Gascar (1635-1701), and Abraham Bloteling. The technique of the art was well worked out by these men and their immediate followers, and it gradually grew in popularity. At the turn of the century worked John Smith (1652-1742) and John Simon (c. 1675-1751), the two best mezzotint artists of the first period. Then we have in quick succession G. White, John Faber, senior, and his much more accomplished son of the same name. Peter Pelham, who introduced mezzotint engraving into America in 1726, is worthy of mention on that account. During the second quarter of the century Thomas Beard, John Brooks, and Andrew Miller, who all learned their art in England, settled in Dublin, and established an Irish School, which not only kept the art alive, but produced four such masters as MacArdell, Houston, Spooner, and Purell.

The greatest period of mezzotint engraving was from 1770 to 1800, as may be seen by the superb prints contributed to the Exhibition. The paintings of Reynolds, Romney, Hoppner, and of other artists, furnished engravers of the calibre of Valentine Green and John Raphael Smith, the great masters of the art, with subjects exactly suited to the technique they used, and to the prevailing sentiment of the day. Other engravers of the first rank of this period were R. Earle, whose fruit-pieces and plates after Wright, of Derby, are notable, W. Dickinson, R. Dunkarton, and W. Pether. Some of these men were painters also, but none had the ability in this direction of W. Ward, whose association with George Morland should not be forgotten.

In the early part of the nineteenth century the only change of importance in the technique of mezzotint engraving since its invention is to be noted. In 1820 W. Say produced a portrait of Queen Caroline engraved on steel. At first some difficulties were met with in working this new material, but they were soon overcome, largely by the efforts of T. Lupton, who in 1822 succeeded in obtaining 1,500 good prints from a steel plate, and was rewarded with a gold medal by the Society of Arts. During the remainder of the 19th century G. Clint, S. W. Reynolds, C. Turner, J. C. Bromley, H. Meyer, D. Lucas and S. Cousins continued to practise the art, which nevertheless gradually declined, as the use of mixed mezzotint was more largely indulged in; some success has, however, attended a recent effort to re-establish work in pure mezzotint.

During the years 1807 to 1819 J. M. W. Turner published his "Liber Studiorum," a collection of studies suggested by Claude's "Liber Veritatis." These were mostly executed in mezzotint by various engravers on a ground deeply etched by Turner himself. In all 71 plates were published, of which C. Turner executed the greatest number. Of the other engravers, Say, Hodgetts, Dunkarton, Clint, Lupton and Dawe may be mentioned, and one plate was produced in aquatint by F. C. Lewis.

The process of aquatint engraving has been said to have been used by Hercules Zeghers (c. 1660), but the point is very doubtful and of little importance, seeing that no further developments occurred. The art really begins with a plate by Jean Le Prince, made about 1750. The Hon. Charles Greville brought the secret to England and communicated it to Paul Sandby, who produced the first English aquatint in 1774. Sandby considerably improved the process, and is believed to have been the first to use the spirit ground.

Aquatint soon gained public favour, mainly as a convenient means of producing coloured plates, and most of the best work therein was devoted to a series of collections of landscapes, topographical and architectural views, and caricatures and costume, such as those published by Ackermann and Orme from about the year 1800 and onwards. As to individual artists, Sandby, Malton, Daniell, Havell, J. C. Stadler, T. Sutherland, and F. C. Lewis, working, some for colours and some in monochrome only, are the most distinguished.

To William Wynne Ryland (1738-1783), is due the introduction of the stipple method into this country; he, having learned it in France, where it had been perfected by Jean François a little earlier. It was applied by him with great success to the reproduction of designs by Angelica Kauffmann, which were generally printed in red or brown. Francesco Bartolozzi (1727-1815) was one of the most successful practitioners of this method; and Lewis Schiavonetti (1765-1810), Giovanni Vendramini (1769-1839), and William Nutter (1754-1802) may also be mentioned.

Mezzotint and stipple engravings were also frequently printed in colours; sometimes receiving a good deal of finishing by hand.

With the exception of the work of Wenceslaus Hollar, a native of Prague (1607-1677), who worked mainly in England except between the years 1645-1652, and whose talents were chiefly devoted to topographical views and costume, there was no etching in England worthy of special reference until the latter half of the eighteenth century, when a small group of imitators of Rembrandt, among whom were B. Wilson, the painter, Capt. W. Baillie, T. Worlidge, and the Rev. R. Byron, may be noted. Bartolozzi and other engravers also used the process; and Rowlandson, Gillray, Dighton, Alken, and others employed it as a vehicle for publishing large numbers of cheap coloured caricatures and views. The original etching, however, of the Norwich School represented by Crome, Cotman, Vincent, and the Rev. E. T. Daniell; the etching of Turner already referred to, and that of Sir David Wilkie and Andrew Geddes form the real commencement of the modern school of British Etching.

In 1840, a clever series of prints was issued by Charles David Read, a drawing-master of Salisbury. The work of George Cruikshank takes a special place at the head of a class apart, with which should be numbered various other humorous draughtsmen working as book illustrators. In 1841, a number of painters formed the first Etching Club and published the "Deserted Village" of Goldsmith, illustrated with 80 etchings by its members. This was followed by "Etched Thoughts" (1844), by several other set of plates illustrating poetry, "Etchings for the Art Union," (1857), and a "Selection of Etchings" (1865). Samuel Palmer, Richard Redgrave, Thomas Creswick, Frederick Tayler, Ansdell, and Cope, are among the leaders of this epoch. The work of the "Junior Etching Club" was on similar lines. The members of these Societies gave an impetus to the practice of the art, which still flourishes at the present day.

A set of works executed by the Students of the Engraving School of the Royal College of Art, formerly styled the Etching Class of the National Art Training School, is exhibited. This School was founded in 1864, its first master being R. J. Lane, A.R.A. He was succeeded by T. O. Barlow, R.A., in 1873, by Professor Alphonse Legros in 1875, while in 1882 the class was under the direction of Mr. F. Goulding. In 1891 Mr. Frank Short, R.E., was placed at the head of the School, which has lately been extended to include all methods of engraving. During this period a very large number of etchers have passed through the school, and of these a considerable proportion have attained to eminence in the exercise of their art. The glass cases contain tools and materials used in the various processes of engraving and etching. These have been prepared in the school by the assistant teacher, C. M. Pott, R.E., under the direction of Mr. Short, who has also supplied the technical notes given in the catalogue.

The nucleus of the collection has been made by a selection of engravings and etchings from the Art Library in the Museum, and the rest of the works exhibited have been lent by various private collectors and others. His Majesty the King has graciously permitted some early engravings, including a rare mezzotint, "The Great Executioner," by Prince Rupert, to be selected from the Royal Collection at Windsor. The best thanks of the Board are tendered to the following gentlemen: Mr. H. S. Theobald, K.C., Mr. W. G. Rawlinson, Mr. A. C. Norman, Mr. H. Percy Horne, Mr. Fitz Reiss, Mr. J. E. Taylor, Mr. Marshall Hall, K.C., M.P., and many others, who have kindly assisted the Exhibition by the loan of many rare engravings.

The works have been arranged, as far as the exigencies of space permitted, according to periods, so that the history of the art may be conveniently studied; but in some cases, in order to give greater prominence to certain artists, the chronological sequence has not been strictly maintained.

SCREEN A.

COLOURED MEZZOTINT AND STIPPLE ENGRAVINGS, AQUATINTS AND ETCHINGS. END OF 18TH AND EARLY 19TH CENTURIES.

Coloured engravings were sometimes printed by filling in the plate with various coloured inks by means of small stumps, &c. This was a lengthy process and was rarely very successful. The more common method was to print broadly with two or three tints of printing ink, and afterwards to complete the colouring by hand with water colours; and in some cases the whole of the colour was added by hand over an ordinary black or grey print.

ENGRAVINGS AFTER J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.
FIRST HALF OF 19TH CENTURY.

Charles TURNER (b. 1773 ; d. 1857).

593. † LITTLE DEVIL'S BRIDGE OVER THE RUSS ABOVE ALTDORFT
Drawn and etched by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate
XIX. "Liber Studiorum."

An early working proof and a close copy of the sepia drawing made by the painter for the engraver to work from.

Lent by Frank Short, Esq., R.E.

594. LITTLE DEVIL'S BRIDGE OVER THE RUSS ABOVE ALTDORFT.
Drawn and etched by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate
XIX. "Liber Studiorum," 1809.

Proof completed, but before the initial letter "M," and with the spelling "Alldorft" instead of "Altdorft." From the Engraver's Family.

Lent by W. G. Rawlinson, Esq.

Robert DUNKARTON (b. 1744 ; d. abt. 1811).

595. HINDHEAD HILL. Drawn and etched by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate XXV. "Liber Studiorum," 1811.
First published state.

Lent by W. G. Rawlinson, Esq.

William SAY (b. 1768 ; d. 1834).

596. WINDMILL AND LOCK. Drawn and etched by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate XXVII. "Liber Studiorum," 1811.

First published state.

Lent by W. G. Rawlinson, Esq.

† As an instance of Turner's minute care in superintending the engraving of these plates, Mr. Rawlinson, in his catalogue of the "Liber Studiorum," quotes the following instructions written by Turner on working proofs of this plate :—

"The light must be sharp and brilliant, particularly upon the front trees, bones, rock, &c.; and if my etching is in your way, viz. the bird and top of the tree, scrape out or beat up the copper. Be careful about the distance. It wants air and light scraping to render it like the place."

And "This sky is much better, but do not understand the spots among the light part. A slight indication of a ray of bursting light under the bridge would improve that part, and a few sharp white touches upon the leaves marked x, because they are now two black spots without connection with the stems of the trees. Put a shade upon the top of the bridge, and under at the top of arch."

J. M. W. TURNER, R.A. (b. 1775 ; d. 1851).

597. JUNCTION OF THE SEVERN AND WYE. Drawn, etched and engraved by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate XXVIII. "Liber Studiorum." 1811.

Lent by W. G. Rawlinson, Esq.

Charles TURNER (b. 1773 ; d. 1857).

602. DUNSTANBOROUGH CASTLE. Drawn and etched by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate XIV. "Liber Studiorum."
Early working proof, shewing the cold appearance of the aquatint on the upper half of the plate, as compared with the mezzotint on the lower part.

The aquatint was used without Turner's sanction, and he wrote on the first proof submitted to him, "Sir, you have done in aquatint all the castle down to the rocks; did I ever ask for such an indulgence?"

Lent by Frank Short, Esq., R.E.

603. DUNSTANBOROUGH CASTLE. Drawn and etched by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. Plate XIV. "Liber Studiorum."
Finished proof, where the mezzotint has been merged into the aquatint.

TOOLS AND MATERIALS USED IN ETCHING AND ENGRAVING.

This Collection has been prepared in the School of Engraving of the Royal College of Art, by the Assistant Teacher, C. M. POTT, R.E., under the direction of Mr. FRANK SHORT, R.E., who has also supplied the following technical notes.

CASE I.

ETCHING

AN etching is a print taken direct from a metal plate by the method known as copper-plate printing, and must not be confused with a pen-and-ink drawing. The work must be wrought with lines, and these lines must be etched, or eaten into the plate by means of acid or other chemicals.

The plate is first covered with a thin coating of a wax-like substance called the "ground," which protects the plate from the action of the acid. Through this ground the lines are drawn with a needle point, laying bare the metal. Acid is then applied and eats, or "bites," a furrow into the metal wherever the needle has gone. Sometimes needles of different degrees of fineness are used, to get varying thicknesses of lines; but usually only one point is employed, the stronger lines being obtained by allowing the acid to act for a longer time, the lines becoming wider, as they get deeper. If any part of the etching is to remain finer or lighter than the other parts, the plate is removed from the acid, washed, dried, and these parts covered over with a varnish, which stops the acid from biting them any deeper. Many gradations are usually made in a plate by this means. The time the acid is allowed to act varies greatly, depending upon the acid or mordant used, the metal, the temperature, and other conditions, and may vary from two minutes to two hours.

1. STEEL PLATE, polished for engraving or etching.
2. ZINC PLATE, polished for engraving or etching.
3. COPPER PLATE, polished for engraving or etching (circular polish).
4. MATERIALS FOR POLISHING PLATES :—
 - a. Sandstone.
 - b. Pumice Stone.
 - c. Slips of Snake-stone (Water-of-Ayr Stone).
 - d. Charcoal used with Water.
 - e. Charcoal used with Oil.
 - f. Polishing Felt.
 - g. Emery Powder.
 - h. Rottenstone Powder.
 - i. Crocus Powder.
 - k. Emery Paper, No. 0000.
 - l. Oil Rubber.

5. COPPER PLATE, covered or "grounded" with dark etching ground, applied (hot) with a dabber. See Etching Grounds. No. 16
6. COPPER PLATE, grounded as in No. 5 and smoked with a bundle of wax tapers while still hot. The smoke is incorporated in the ground, and enables the lines to be more readily seen as the work proceeds.
7. COPPER PLATE, covered with paste ground, applied cold with the roller, and afterwards smoked.
8. COPPER PLATE coated with liquid ground smoked.
9. TRACING in lead pencil on thin paper for transferring the drawing. The paper is damped and laid on the grounded plate, which is then rolled through the press with a little less than ordinary printing pressure. The result is a drawing in grey lines on the black ground, as in No. 11.
10. GELATINE TRANSFER. In using this method of transferring, the drawing is scratched into the gelatine with a needle, and these scratches hold whatever pigment is rubbed into them for the transfer—usually black or red chalk.
11. COPPER PLATE with pencil transfer, "Tobit's Blindness" (after Rembrandt).
12. COPPER PLATE, with lines drawn through the ground with a needle. It is now ready for biting in the acid after the back has been protected with Brunswick Black, or some similar varnish.
13. BACK OF COPPER PLATE protected with Brunswick Black.
14. COPPER PLATE bitten by acid.
15. PROOF from Plate No. 14.

In the case of additional work being required after the plate has been "proved," a similar (but usually unsmoked) ground is laid, care being taken to rub the ground well into the lines already bitten so as to prevent their being further acted on by the acid in the bath. A small piece of printing muslin (see No. 74) is used for rubbing in the ground.

16. ETCHING GROUNDS, ETC.

Etching grounds are generally composed of beeswax, asphaltum, Burgundy pitch, and gum-mastic in varying combinations and proportions, according to the purpose for which they are intended. They are applied to the plates by the three following methods: (1) hot, by means of a dabber; (2) cold, dissolved into a paste with oil of lavender, by means of a roller; (3) reduced to a liquid in chloroform and poured over the plate.

- a. Dark Etching Ground, laid hot with dabber.
- b. Transparent Etching Ground, laid hot with dabber.
- c. Paste Ground, laid cold with a roller.
- d. Liquid Etching Ground.
- e. Roller for laying Paste Grounds.
- f. Kid Dabber.
- g. Silk Dabber.

Dabbers are made of horsehair covered with cotton-wool and finally with kid or silk.

- h. Ball of Dark Etching Ground wrapped in silk (precaution against grit).
- i. Tapers used for smoking Grounds.
- k. Hand-vice for holding plates while being smoked.

17. MATERIALS FOR STOPPING-OUT.

- a. Transparent Stopping-out Varnish.
- b. Black Stopping-out Varnish.
- c. Brunswick Black.
- d. Stopping-out Brushes.

“Stopping-out” means covering with varnish such parts of the plate as are not to be further affected by the acid before replacing the plate in the bath.

18. LIQUIDS FOR BITING-IN OR “ETCHING” THE PLATES.

- a. Nitric Bath.

This is composed of nitric acid of 1.42 specific gravity mixed with water in varying proportions, according to its intended use. For copper it varies from equal parts of each, to one-third of acid with two-thirds of water. Weaker solutions are used for zinc and steel. So-called nitrous acid is sometimes preferred.

- b. Dutch Bath.

This is usually composed of hydrochloric acid 10 parts, chlorate of potash 2 parts, water 88 parts, but sometimes less water is used.

- c. Perchloride of Iron Bath.

This consists of a 40° Beaumé solution of Perchloride of Iron in water.

NOTE.—The colours of the Nitric and Dutch baths exhibited are due to dissolved copper, these baths having been used.

- 19. DISH used to contain the Bath and Plate. Sometimes the mordant is applied locally with a brush or feather, avoiding the use of a dish.

20. INSTRUMENTS FOR DRAWING AND WORKING ON THE PLATE.

- a. Diamond Point.
- b. c. d. Needles.
- e. f. Burnishers.
- g. h. Scrapers.
- i. Graver, or Burin.

CASE 2.

21. COPPER PLATE with "sand-grain" unbitten.

Sand-grain is produced by passing sand or glass-paper through the press in contact with the grounded plate. The particles of glass pierce the ground in innumerable places, and the plate is then bitten in an acid bath, with "stopping out," the same as in etching. This process is used as an auxiliary to etching, and also entirely without lines for a tone plate.

22. COPPER PLATE, the upper half showing "sand-grain" bitten and the lower half "fouling."

Fouling occurs when the acid bites through faulty places in the ground, and is sometimes made use of intentionally by etchers.

23. PROOF of Plate No. 22.

24. TOOLS used in making alterations to engraved and etched plates.

- a. Callipers.
- b. Hammer.
- c. Anvil.
- d. Punches.

Alterations are made by burnishing the places smooth, or, if deep, by scraping or grinding the place into a smooth hollow, and afterwards knocking up the plate level from the back upon a polished anvil. The callipers are used to indicate the corresponding place on the back, and the knocking up is done with the small end of the hammer, or with punches.

25. COPPER PLATE (back) showing knocking-up where work has been entirely removed.

26. COPPER PLATE with alterations made.

27. PROOFS of Plate No. 26 before, during, and after alteration.

- a. As the Plate was originally cut.
- b. The word "Plate" removed, showing burnisher marks and holes.
- c. The holes knocked-up and burnisher marks polished out. The base of the ornament above the alteration has also been lightened with the burnisher.

SOFT GROUND ETCHING.

In this process ordinary etching ground is used; it is mixed with about half its weight of lard (more or less according to the temperature of the air). The ground is laid as in ordinary etching, and smoked. When cold, thin paper is carefully strained over it. Upon this the drawing is then made with a lead-pencil, which causes the paper to pick off the ground in a broken line, corresponding to the grain of the paper, the hardness of the pencil, and the pressure used. The plate is afterwards bitten in the same manner as an ordinary etching.

28. BALL OF SOFT ETCHING-GROUND tied in silk.

29. DABBER.

30. COPPER PLATE, with a drawing (after J. S. Cotman.) The paper partly removed, in order to show the pencil work on one side, and the black ground picked up on the other.

31. COPPER PLATE, with soft ground etching bitten in.

32. PROOF OF PLATE No. 31.

DRY POINT.

This is really a form of engraving, but is usually considered to belong to the processes of etching. It is merely scratching into the bare metal with a steel or diamond point. This not only ploughs into the copper, but turns up an edge or furrow, technically called "burr." The greater part of the printing quality of "dry-point" is given by this burr, to which the ink clings in printing. When this burr is removed, as in the few lines in the bottom left-hand corner of the Plate No. 33, the lines print clear as shown in the proof.

33. COPPER PLATE worked with dry-point only.

34. PROOF OF PLATE No. 33, with all the "burr" on.

35. PROOF OF PLATE No. 33, with the "burr" removed from part of the small square of lines in the lower right-hand corner. The faint lines show the printing power of the needle scratches without the burr.

36. DRY-POINT NEEDLE.

The point of this is sharpened at a more obtuse angle than those used for etching.

LINE ENGRAVING.

In pure line engraving all the work is cut with a graver and no etching is used. Much "engraving" is, however, partly bitten and partly cut. Plate No. 37 has the intended design sketched in dry-point, and the darker part cut with the graver, as the whole of the plate would be if completed. With a properly-sharpened graver there is scarcely any burr made in cutting, as in the case of dry-point, the copper being removed in a clean shaving. The graver being pushed with some force by the palm of the hand, a severe character is always given to the line as opposed to the freedom of an etched line.

37. COPPER PLATE with pure line engraving.

The design being first slightly marked on the plate with dry-point and then cut with the burin or graver.

38. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 37.

The darker part of the design has been cut and the lighter just marked for cutting.

39. SQUARE SECTION GRAVER OR BURIN.

40. ENGRAVER'S CUSHION.

41. ENGRAVER'S EYEGLASS.

CASE 3.

AQUATINT.

Although this method is often called "engraving," it is really etching by tones, for all the graving is done by acid; there are, or need be, no lines.

The plate is partially protected by specks of resin or asphaltum, and between these specks the acid bites, giving the plate an ink-holding capacity. Owing to the fineness of the dots or grain, a proof from an aquatint plate appears to the eye like a wash drawing. The forms and tones are obtained by "stopping out" as in etching. The natural tendency of aquatint is to render the subject in flat tones, but these can, to some extent, be modified during the biting and afterwards with the burnisher. There are many ways of producing the partial protection of the plate (called the aquatint ground), the two most important being the resinous dust ground, and the spirit ground.

42. MATERIALS FOR AQUATINT GROUNDS.

a. Asphaltum Dust.

b. Resin dissolved in Spirit of Wine.

43. COPPER PLATE covered heavily with Asphaltum Dust.

Finely-powdered asphaltum is placed in a large box, which is either revolved or shaken in order to produce a smother of asphaltum dust. The box is brought to rest, and the plate inserted, which soon becomes coated with the dust. This deposit is afterwards fixed to the plate by heat. Resin is sometimes used instead of asphaltum.

44. COPPER PLATE cut in halves after being coated with fine asphaltum dust.

a. Part with the ground, unbitten.

b. Part bitten to three degrees of darkness.

45. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 44b.

46. COPPER PLATE coated with spirit aquatint ground.

The solution is poured upon the plate, and on the spirit evaporating the resin is left in a curious state of reticulation. Other conditions being equal, the more resin there is in the solution the coarser is the granulation.

47. AQUATINT PLATE stopped out ready for a second biting.

48. PLATE SIMILAR TO NO. 47, bitten ; with a few smaller darks added as a third biting.

49. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 48. The strip at the edge shows the degrees of the three bitings, and is often used as a guide in working a plate.

50. COPPER PLATE laid with a much coarser spirit aquatint ground and bitten with one stopping out and one biting, showing merely the high lights and the lightest tone in the subject (No. 53).

51. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 50.

52. COPPER PLATE similar to No. 50, bitten with three further gradations of dark.

53. SIMPLE PROOF OF PLATE NO. 52.

54. HEAVIER PROOF OF PLATE NO. 52.

This ground is much coarser than would be used for a subject of this size, but has been made thus in order to more easily show the characteristic forms of spirit aquatint grounds.

MEZZOTINT ENGRAVING.

In pure Mezzotint Engraving there is no biting, and no lines are used. The plate is first prepared or grounded by rocking the grounding tool or cradle (see No. 62) over it until the "burr" thus produced prints a rich full black. The subject is then wrought by scraping away the burr in the lighter tones and finally polishing the plate quite smooth in the high lights. In some mezzotints etched lines are used to emphasize the forms (as in Turner's Liber Studiorum), and in others a "texture" is obtained by stipple etching or partial rocking with a coarser tool, under the final mezzotint ground. It is often also mixed with machine ruling and other work, and is then called "mixed mezzotint."

55. COPPER PLATE over which the tool (48 teeth to the inch) has passed in one direction (technically one "way"), the tool used here taking one-third of the width of the plate at each journey. The upper part of the plate has been scraped clear of "burr" to show more clearly the dots or cuts of the points of the tool.
56. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 54.
57. COPPER PLATE with six ways of the tool at six different angles. Burr at the top removed in like manner to No. 55.
58. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 57.
59. COPPER PLATE grounded about 40 ways, making a "full" ground with the tool (60 teeth to the inch) used. On this plate an outline has been transferred from gelatine, the usual way of commencing work. The upper corner of the plate has been partially scraped, to show how the grain of a grounded plate reveals itself, as the velvet-like burr is more or less removed.
60. PROOF OF PLATE NO. 59 before outline was transferred.
61. GELATINE TRANSFER.
62. MEZZOTINT GROUNDING TOOLS :
 - a. Tool attached to a rocking pole of which this is a simple but perfectly efficient form. Sometimes the poles and tool handles are weighted with lead.
 - b. Tool with 28 teeth to the inch.
 - c. Tool with 50 teeth to the inch.
 - d. Tool with 90 teeth to the inch.
 - e. Tool with 105 teeth to the inch.
 - f., g. Tools in handles used without rocking pole.
 - h. Tool used by Thomas Lupton, in original handle.

NOTE.—It will be noticed that the faces of these tools are grooved the whole length, and each of the ridges thus formed makes a point on being ground at an angle from the back. The end of the tool is curved to enable it to rock over the surface of the plate.

63. SCALE. The "ways" on a plate are laid out in a series of progressive angles so that no two ways come exactly in the same direction. The angle instrument here shown has two scales. The angle of the one repeats itself after the 54th way, and the other after the 84th way.

The earliest mezzotinters laid their grounds with a channelled roller. (See the engraving "The Executioner," by Prince Rupert, No. 84.) Later on, the grounds were laid with the same tools as those which are now used, but without the pole handle. The "ways" were arranged only at four angles, i.e., 45° , and these were continued over and over again at varying distances till the ground was full. Very good grounds can be laid in this manner, but the method of the progressing angles is more certain.

64. MEZZOTINT SCRAPERS.

65. ROULETTES.

STIPPLE ENGRAVING.

In Stipple Engraving the work is done by an elaborate series of dots, carefully arranged with reference to the planes and modelling of the subject. The dots are usually marked with the needle through a ground, and bitten with the acid; and are afterwards added to and deepened with the burin. The burin for stipple is bent downwards, this being obviously the best shape for "pecking" into the dots. In Line Engraving the burin is curved upwards at the point.

In some Stipple Engraving both bitten and cut lines are used in conjunction with the dots.

Chalk Engraving is a coarse kind of stipple, the dots being made to imitate the character of the grain of a chalk drawing; and the work was often done partly by soft ground etching and partly by roulettes and punches of various kinds.

66. STIPPLE GRAVER.

PRINTING.

68. SET OF PROOFS to show variations in printing from the same plate, and with the same ink.

- a. Proof from the plate without ink, showing all the lines standing up in relief; the damp paper being moulded into the sunk parts of the plate by the pressure of the roller combined with the spring of the blankets. This is a very important point to remember in considering all proofs from engraved plates.

- b. Proof printed in the simplest manner, the surface of the plate being made as clean as possible with printing muslin or canvas.
- c. Proof printed as bright as possible (called technically "dry"), the plate being finally cleared with the palm of the hand charged with printing ink and whitening. An ordinary visiting card is printed in this manner.
- d. Proof printed fuller. The hand is used in the same manner as in the last example, but with less pressure and a little "retroussage" is used. (See Note on No. 76.)
- e. Proof printed still fuller, or "fat."
- f. Proof printed still fatter. Much over-printed. Here a certain amount of ink is left on the surface of the plate (either by hand or canvas), and the lines are nearly lost into tone by "retroussage."
- g. Proof upon India paper. This paper is very thin and is usually cut rather smaller than the size of the plate. In going through the press this adheres to the stouter plate paper placed over it, both papers being previously brushed (with a brush similar to a clothes-brush) on the joining surfaces. In more careful printing, however, a little starch paste is used.
- h. Counter-proof. Obtained by passing a freshly-printed proof through the printing press in contact with a piece of damped paper. The ink on the true proof "sets off" on the new paper and a "reverse" proof is the result. This is sometimes done by engravers to more readily compare their proof with the plate; all plates, of course, being "reverse" as regards right and left.
- i. Ordinary proof from the copper.
- j. Proof under exactly the same conditions from the same plate steel-faced.
- k. The copper plate, steel-faced.

69. ETCHED PLATE, PARTLY STEEL-FACED.

70. ETCHED PLATE, ONE-HALF STEEL-FACED.

71. PROOFS of No. 70.

- a. Before steel-facing.
- b. After partly steel-facing.

These two proofs are shewn to demonstrate what slight difference (if any) there may be between the result given in printing from the copper as opposed to the steel surface. The proof No. 71*a* was printed from the copper before steel-facing, and No. 71*b* after the plate had been partly steel-faced (as it now is, see No. 70). A steel-faced copper plate must not, however, be confounded with a steel plate, in which the qualities of the work and of the proof are very different.

72. COPPER PLATE PRINTING INK. It is made from any pigment with sufficient body, ground rather stiffly with burnt linseed oil. The earth colours, such as the umbers and ochres, are used where possible for colour, and there are three kinds of black pigment in common use, viz., Frankfort black, heavy French black, and a much lighter pigment obtained from the smoke of burning paraffin. The two former are for giving the "body" to the ink, and the latter is used to mix with either or both of the others where surface tint is required and also when it is intended to use "retroussage."

The oil is prepared by first boiling the linseed oil in a cauldron, and then setting fire to it. It is then continuously stirred, and the longer it is allowed to burn, the thicker, or more like varnish, it becomes.

In printing a proof, the plate is usually warmed on the heater (and kept warm), so as to assist the manipulation of the somewhat stiff ink. It is applied thickly all over the plate with a dabber, which drives it into the lines or tones. The surplus ink is then wiped off the surface of the plate with a pad of one of the wiping canvases, and generally finally finished with the palm of the hand. This process has to be repeated for every proof.

73. INKING DABBER.

74. PRINTING MUSLIN AND CANVAS FOR WIPING.

75. A PAD OF No. 74, USED.

76. RETROUSSAGE MUSLIN. Merely very soft and fine muslin loosely folded. In using it, the muslin is passed lightly over and over the heated plate (following the hand wiping), but scarcely touching it. The movement of the muslin brings a portion of the ink over the edges of the lines, softening them and making them print darker than they otherwise would.

77. SAMPLES OF PRINTING PAPERS.

78. WAX FOR PREVENTING TARNISH, OR CORROSION ON PLATES.

CASE No. 5.

79. RULING MACHINE AND COPPER PLATE, WITH SPECIMENS OF RULED LINES.

Lent by J. B. Pratt, Esq.

“Machine-ruling” is a method by which absolutely accurate parallel and evenly spaced lines can be ruled with a diamond point through an etching ground with any degree of fineness. It is used to a large extent in line engraving; its peculiar quality being the readiness with which perfectly even tints can be obtained.

80. MODEL OF STEEL-FACING TANK.

Copper plates when ready for printing are often covered with an exceedingly thin facing of steel (or iron) by suspending them in an iron solution and passing an electric current through it. The copper is covered, almost instantaneously, with a coating of hard bright iron. From three to twenty minutes may be needed to obtain a sufficient thickness of iron, according to the plate and the current employed. Many solutions containing iron may be used, but the simplest method is to fill the tank with water, in each gallon of which is dissolved 1 lb. of sal-ammoniac. A large iron or steel plate (the anode) is then placed permanently in it and attached to the positive pole of a battery (or other electric current), and a small piece of steel (generally an old file) is temporarily suspended opposite to it attached to the negative pole, until the bath becomes sufficiently full of iron to cause a deposit on a copper plate when placed in it.

The plate to be steel-faced is suspended by a strip of copper, soldered temporarily to the back, which serves both as a support to the plate, and to complete the circle of the electric current by contact with a brass rod connected to the negative pole of the battery. The quantity of the current passing must be proportionate to the surface of the plate to be steel-faced, and its intensity may vary from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 6 volts. It is essential that the copper should be chemically clean before it is put in the bath, and it is necessary to remove it from the bath every few minutes to wash, and gently polish the surface with a paste of fine whitening and water applied with a flannel, in order to keep the coating clear and bright.

The steel-facing can be easily removed when desired, by placing the plate in a mixture of nitric acid and water (1 acid to 7 water), which instantly dissolves the steel, leaving the copper untouched.

81. COPPER PLATE PRINTING PRESS.

82. HEATER for warming plates whilst being printed.

83. JIGGER for supporting plates whilst being wiped.

84. STONE SLAB AND MULLER for grinding ink.
